Josiah Holbrook
AMERICAN LYCEUM NEARLY CENTURY OLD.

Institution Founded in 1826 by Josiah Holbrook in Massachusetts.

It is of interest, in view of the course of Lyceum lectures and entertainments announced elsewhere in this paper, to call attention to the fact that the Lyceum is getting ready to celebrate its One Hundredth Anniversary. In November, 1826, Mr. Josiah Holbrook of Derby, Conn., organized the first Lyceum association in the little village of Millbury, Mass., thus beginning to carry out a plan for popular education, self-culture, and community instruction that had been developing in his mind for many years. This was the beginning of the Lyceum—since it has spread to nearly every city, village and hamlet in the United States and Canada and lately has begun to develop in New Zealand and Australia. More than 15,000 communities support Lyceum series of lectures and entertainments.

Josiah Holbrook was born in 1788. He was the son of Col. Daniel Holbrook, of Derby, Conn., a veteran of the Revolutionary war. He was educated in the common schools of Derby, attended college under Rev. Amasa Porter, entered Yale 1806, graduating 1810. Opened, about 1819, on his farm, near Derby, one of the first schools in America which sought to teach a popularized form of natural science, and to combine manual labor with education. Boys in this school were allowed to pay a portion of their expenses by laboring on the farm. The American Journal of Education, October, 1826, published a paper by him, setting forth his views on the subject of "Association of Adults for the Purpose of Mutual Education." A few weeks later, at Millbury, Mass., he organized the first lyceum. Mr. Holbrook published, beginning July, 1832, a weekly paper called "The Family Lyceum," which was the first lyceum journal in America. He founded, 1837, the lyceum village of Berea, Ohio. For seventeen years after this event he devoted his life solely to promoting the great enterprise which he had launched in the American lyceum, this work being tragically ended at Lynchburg, Va., where, in 1854, while conducting studies of geological formations, he fell from a cliff into the stream below, his body being found in the stream several days later.

With no personal aspirations, no desire for fame, no ambition for individual advancement, and no wish for wealth, he sought only the welfare and happiness of others—the very embodiment of the Spirit of the Lyceum.

In 1926 a great celebration will be held in Boston to celebrate the 100th anniversary of Holbrook's founding the Lyceum. Many noted statesmen, preachers, orators, authors, and business men from all over America will have a part in the jubilee celebration.

JOHN KENDRICK BANGS

So long as the American Lyceum is capable of commanding the services of such men as John Kendrick Bangs, the sunny humorist whose written and spoken words have added to the joys of millions, it will serve a real need in every community. To hear Bangs is to get a new joy in living. In his lectures there is evidenced the same sunny viewpoint which marks his books, and had he never contributed to the humorous literature of his time his "Salubrities I Have Met" and "More Salubrities," the lyceum lectures which have met with such enthusiastic commendation for a dozen years, would have established his fame. In his many years of experience as a writer and lecturer Mr. Bangs has come in contact with many of the great and near-great men and women of his time, and his lectures are bright, interesting, humorous and intensely human comments on these friends and acquaintances which he divides into two original classes—mere celebrities and "salubrities." This genial author-humorist is soon to be heard on the lyceum course.
